

Stop and Assess

By John C. Maxwell

Where are you taking people? Have you been there before? Answer the following questions to help you see where you've been and where you're going.

1. When you're the driver the car, it's vital that you know where you're going. The same applies to leadership. Where are you going with your dreams, ideas and visions? Can you see the end?
2. Have you done the work in the trenches to say to others, I've been through this and I'm going to lead you through it?
3. Do you lead in such a way that you are investing in people, giving them the confidence and the ability to lead others?
Now that you've checked your directional angle, what steps can you take to help stay on track and take others with you?
